

ONE DAY

(Neil Murray)

You've come undone, now you're confused
You're not certain what to do
The pain of loss is like a tide
You feel you're caught in a slide
You see these mountains
They are tall and these buildings, they too can fall
To the sea, so stretch away your memories
And here I say

One day you will find your voice
One day you will make your choice

See how the world spreads from your feet
To where the sky and earth they meet
Toss up clouds that come and go
Some sort of message in the flow
Your feelings now are but a moment
Remember this loss could be a kiss
Just like the breeze against your skin
There's a secret strength you're taking in

Oh I say, one day you will find your voice
One day you will make your choice
One dream will come true for you
One love will call on you

And you will find your family was there all the time for you to see
And from your door, you'll step outside and read that message in the sky
What brings you wisdom when you grow old?
What warms the house when you get home?
What calls your name, the same as truth?
What speaks of love from me to you?

Oh I say, one day you will find your voice
One day you will make your choice
One dream will come true for you
One love will call on you